Conferences & Events

- By invitation of Governor dr György Matolcs, the Governor of the Magyar National Bank, the Central Bank of the Republic of Hungary, Professor Jones delivered the Keynote speech at the Multilateral Cooperation Panel moderated by dr Dániel Palotai, executive director and chief economist of Magyar National Bank, at the Pre-Forum Session of the Budapest Eurasia Forum on 29-31 October 2019 in Budapest, Hungary. Professor Jones argued that China's "Belt and Road Initiative" (BRI) is a maritime success, an overland failure, because of chaotic political and topographical features of South Asia, Eurasia. Instead, Professor Jones argued that the current BRI should be limited to local traffic, meaning cargoes to and from Eurasian states, with an "express railway and highway" from East Asia to be implemented across the Russian Federation with its flat terrain and political stability, ending up at the same location in Central Europe: Łódź, Poland. This is a form of what Professor Jones calls "international separation of powers", meaning it should balance Chinese hegemony in the region, as well as being a faster way to ship goods from Japan and South Korea to Europe, especially if "choke points" emerge along the Yellow, East China, and South China Seas.

He focused also on the Native American tribal populations over the past 400 years, comparing the Navaho in Arizona and Utah with the Wampanoag of Massachusetts led by Massasoit in 1620, and their respective outcomes: Navaho have become impoverished by relegation to "reservations" several of which he visited, Wampanoag have interfaced with the general American population, achieved prosperity while retaining their cultural identity, as have Native American tribes in Alaska that were not herded onto government "Indian Reservations".
